Background

Mobilizing Myanmar (MM) is a multisector digital and financial inclusion initiative that is using smartphones to connect women and the poor to economic opportunity. It has already realized significant tangible results guiding the regulatory groundwork for healthy competition between telecoms; influencing the government mandate that mobile coverage extend to 95% of the population; and creating a strong foundation for a national digital financial literacy campaign, interoperability between digital financial service providers, and build out of a mobile money agent network to provide cash-in/cash-out transfers nationwide. Mobilizing Myanmar could, within a few years, be a global game-changer for women and girls as they gain a foothold in the formal economy through digital finance.

With pervasive smartphone usage, progressive regulations, and a limited banking system, Myanmar provides an ideal environment to innovate and demonstrate how women can be empowered through digital tools and mobile financial services in concert with strong women's networks. Myanmar is a primary smartphone market: 94% of the population has access to 3G/4G networks; 83% of households have at least one mobile phone; there is more SIMS than people; and there's a healthy, competitive market with five mobile financial service providers. Equally robust are Myanmar's vast networks of women's community organizations, ideal for disseminating training on digital literacy and livelihood because the locally led organizations understand local languages, cultures, incentives and markets. Lessons Learned in Myanmar could be shared to empower women in other low- and middle-income countries.

Mobilizing Myanmar's core work over the next few years is a national digital literacy and livelihood campaign to ensure poor, rural, ethnic, and migrant women of Myanmar are included in the digital economy. MM's train-the-trainer campaign will be created and delivered in country and on the borders by teachers and grassroots organizations that understand local markets, culture, and ethnic languages. In this model, women will learn from teachers, their daughters, each other, self-help groups and online—a sustainable approach that empowers women to adapt as technology and the economy evolve. Pilot Digital Villages, focused surveys, and a thoughtful results framework will enable WMM to capture learning that can be scaled up, replicated and shared in the region and globally. The target villages will also offer an opportunity for government to see up close the opportunities created with digital literacy, especially among those most marginalized.
